

Bedroom Farce

by Alan Ayckbourn

All Delia and Ernest's attempts to celebrate their anniversary are doomed: their nice meal out a dismal failure, their cosy midnight supper in bed (pilchards on toast) is rudely interrupted by a visit from Susannah, their neurotic daughter-in-law. In another bedroom, Nick lies prostrate (with a slipped disc and terminal self-pity) as wife Jan deserts him for the evening to go alone to Malcolm and Kate's housewarming party. And who should Jan run into, in the newlyweds' bedroom, but her old flame Trevor, who just happens to be in the middle of an almighty row with his wife – Susannah!

Can any relationship last the night? Will anyone get any sleep? Ayckbourn is the supreme chronicler of social embarrassment and in this classic farce he's at his brilliant best.
